Family Literacy

November is best known for Thanksgiving and Veterans Day, but there are many noteworthy days observed throughout the month to create awareness on a variety of topics. One such topic emphasized this month is Family Literacy, which focuses on the importance of literacy among young readers and their families. Reading as a family on a regular basis can help form stronger relationships and encourage positive growth and development. Literacy experts agree, reading with a child improves their cognitive development. Language skills, concentration, and creativity are shown to increase with consistent shared reading. Reading activates the brain and strengthens neural connections which will remain stimulated throughout a person's life time. Check out some of the great organizations in Tulsa that help children and families improve their literacy.
